In 2009, Congress passed legislation that prohibits colleges and universities from considering veterans' benefits as a financial resource when they evaluate student eligibility for federal need-based financial aid. To ensure that U-M students with comparable financial circumstances are treated equitably with respect to university need-based aid, however, the U-M Office of Financial Aid takes into account veterans' benefits for tuition and books when determining eligibility for institutional grant funds. If you apply for financial aid and you wish to be considered for university grants and scholarships, you will be asked to supply information about veterans' educational benefits you elect to receive.

If you already have an award from the Office of Financial Aid and have not submitted your Veterans Educational Benefit Questionnaire, you may not be entitled to all the aid you have received.
